

Reflection Questions for the Day of Collective Action

The following questions are suggestions to get participants thinking about the day and how they can process what they have learned from attending sessions. They can be used by faculty who are creating assignments for students who are participating in the Day of Collective Action, or by anyone looking for some guided reflection on the day.

- What did you find most interesting or surprising?
- When you were going through this session, how did you feel?
- What practices can be incorporated into current practices that can be enacted on a daily basis? How might you be an ally or an accomplice?
- How might identities at the center of conversations you've participated in today inform intersectionality?
- How are you understanding your fellow students, faculty, and staff?
- How do you envision the campus changing?
